Jim Carroll, author and musician dead at 59
September 13, 9:38 PM | Little Rock Entertainment Examiner | Mitch McCracken

Jim Carroll, musician, author and poet is dead at the age of 59. Carroll died at his home in New York from a heart attack.

Leonardo Di Caprio starred as Carroll in the 1995 film based on his autobiography, The Basketball Diaries.

Written in 1978 The Basketball Diaries is the story of his life as a teenager growing up in the middle of New York's drug culture.

That same year Patti Smith encouraged him from his own band, The Jim Carroll Band. 'Catholic Boy' was the debut album for The Jim Carroll Band in 1980.

The single from the album was 'People Who Died'. Two years later it was used in the soundtrack to E.T.

During his career, Carroll collaborated with Lou Reed, Boz Scaggs, Ray Manzarek, Pearl Jam, Rancid and Blue Oyster Cult.

Other Entertainment Stories:

- Michael Jackson YouTube tribute is amazing
- Was Ellen DeGeneres the right choice?
- Tila Tequila is lashing out at the San Diego D.A.'s office
- Two police officers on leave as Rihanna probe continues
- Ellen DeGeneres is not the judge
- NBC's biggest loser is still Conan O'Brien
- Whitney Houston is back on top of the Billboard charts
- Sam Phillips selling Elvis’ contract to RCA was no mistake
- Jimi Jamison is a true Survivor in a business where only the talented survive,

You can get the latest entertainment news delivered straight to your inbox. Just click "Subscribe" above this article. The Examiner will never send you anything you didn't ask for or give your information to anyone else.

If you want you can follow me on Twitter, Facebook and MySpace.